the Straits community will adopt the recommendations of the Chamber of Commerce Committee, that the local Government will restdily full in with the scheme, and that the home Government will accord its sanction. A currency that is not good enough to serve as a measure of the salaries of the public servants of a state is not good enough for the operations of trade and commerce. Not only have the Straits, like Hongkong, had for some time past to pay "exchange compensation" to officials of English domicile, but they have now had to grant a special allowance to the public servants of local domicile on account of the increased cost of living, in other words, owing to the decreased purchasing power of silver. This is termed a temporary allowance, but if the currency were not converted there can be little doubt the allowance would become permanent and disappear only with a straightforward increase of salaries. In Hongkong a similar measure has not yet been adopted, partly on account of the difficulty of balancing the budget, and partly, perhaps, because the pinch has not yet been quite so acutely felt here as in the Straits, but on all liands complaints are heard amongst the native population of the dearness of commodities, wages are going up, and the Government-like private employers will have to adapt itself to the altered conditions. The most satisfactory method of adaptation would be to pay in a coin that offered some probability of being worth as much next week as this week. As for the silver dollar, even the Banks are going back on it and decline to settle exchange forward except at very sliff

When Japan announced her decision to adopt the gold standard it was said that the change would not have much effect on the value of silver, that Japan had not been absorbing much silver anyway. and that what little effect the change might otherwise have exercised had been fully discounted during the progress of the discussion. This was the view put forward by sanguine friends of the white metal, and for a time it seemed to prevail, but as soon as the operation came near enough to be correctly focussed the rate of exchange fell rapidly. Other explanations had then to be found for this singular conduct on the part of silver, and it was said to be due to large sales by timid holders. But what made the holders timid? Simply the realisation of the fact that another prop had

The Straits' have perhaps not been a very important market for silver as compared with some others, but under existing circumstances the colony's abandonment of the white metal is calculated to have a depressing effect on the course of exchange and may possibly cause as serious a drop as did Japan's conversion scheme.

The ex-Ambassador, M. Marcel Hutin, who constantly inspires the Gaulois, parretes the story of the nearness of war between France and England in August, 1893. It may be remembered that Lord Rosebery, who was Foreign Minister at the time, afterwards stated, in the speech in which he gave his reasons for resigning the leadership of the Liberal party, that for a period of twenty-four hours there was actually danger of a war between France and England. The recent visit of the King of Siam to France has thus not only led to considerable speculation as to what may happen, but has evoked reminiscences of a very critical period. The account of the writer in the Gaulous is that-

"In the month of August, 1893, when Anglo-French relations had become so strained over the Simese Question that an order to mobolise the Builish Fleet had already been secretly given, and that the ships in manouvring in the Channel were fully manned and armed, the Emperor William was at Osborne on a visit to the Queen, and aspecially to take part in the Cowes Regatta. The German Sovereign before leaving Berlin had conferred with his Chanceller, General von Caprivi, about the France-Sinmese conflict, and also with his Foreign Minister, Baron von Marschall. Lord Rosebery, in view of France's formal intention to maintain her rights, and in view of the Ultimatum just sent to Bangkok had sought to draw the Emperor into the Slamese question, and had tried ail the burder to secure his goodwill, as Great Britain was preparing a stroke. The Emperor sintentions were not known exactly instant. when on Aug. 2 his yacht Meleor was made (the Gaulots informant accontinuted the word) the Opvice of the SOCIETY on and after to beat Lord Dunraven's Vallegrie, which had that date passed the mark first, and the Prince of Wales s By Order of the Board. Britannia. The order to mobilise the Brilish Fleet had been given. William II. was dining at the club when a telegram from his Ambassador in Lordon informed him of the decision of the British Government to suddenly declare war against France. The Emperor rose at once, threw his napkin on the table, and telegraphed to Count Hatzfeat to protest against the measure adopted by Lord Rossbery. Moreover, he advanced the date of his THE CERTIFICATES Nos. 1847 and sent to Great Britain attacking France on this Company, standing in the name of Mr account of Siam."
